Anesthesia/Surgery Check-off Form

The doctors and staff at All Creatures Animal Hospital would like to offer you the most advanced medical care and services available to your pet. Laboratory work before anesthesia/surgery can make us aware of unknown medical conditions that may make your pet a poor surgical risk or increases the chance of adverse reaction to the anesthesia. The latest technology enables us to run safe and accurate blood chemistries minutes before anesthetic induction. These tests are similar to those your own physician would run. In addition, the results of these tests serve as reference values in case your pet should become ill in the future or can even detect serious problems before they become clinical.

During an anesthetic emergency, blood pressure in your pet can drop quickly, making it difficult for the Doctor to administer life saving emergency drugs. We strongly recommend the placing of an IV catheter before surgery. In human medicine, this is often a requirement instead of an option.
